Hope For This Year's Harvest

AS ONE OF THE GREAT wheat producing nations Canada, and particularly the people of the Prairie Provinces, cannot but be at all times deeply interested in the world food situation, for economic conditions here are to a large degree dependent on the demand on foreign markets for the products of our farms. Wheat, which is also known in many places as the "bread grain" is always regarded as being of great value in sustaining life, and is particularly essential when other foods are scarce. At the present time there is an acute food shortage in the world, and a great deal depends upon the success of this year's harvest on the wheat farms of North America. Britain, which is managing on very limited supplies of food, has little hope of a good harvest this year because of the storms of unprecedented severity which buffeted the country during the winter and early spring.

Situation To Be More Acute

As a result of these storms Britain will have to depend upon shipments from other countries for food supplies in the coming year. In Europe, and particularly in Germany serious food shortages are occurring and many observers predict that even more serious situations will arise in the next few months. In regard to conditions in Germany, there are many people who look upon the present plight of the people there as a direct result of their own actions. There are also many who believe that the Germans should not expect help from abroad, in view of the misery for which they were responsible when their armies swept over Europe. This has been a controversial subject ever since the defeat of Germany. Disregarding the moral aspects of the problem, however, it must be admitted that we can hope for neither economic stability nor permanent peace when people in any part of the world are without food.

Should Receive More Attention

Lack of food is looked upon as one of the most common causes of political unrest, and recent events have demonstrated only too clearly that political instability abroad can seriously affect our own prospects for progress and security. The fact that we are without doubt living in "one world" and that the problems and distress of any one group of people cannot be safely disregarded, has not yet been fully realized and seriously considered by everyone. That fact, however, remains one of the fundamental truths of our times, and unless it is given serious thought, many of our present plans for the peace and security of the world will, of necessity, fail. Great hope is centred this year on the wheat harvest in this country, and it is to be hoped that there will be a heavy crop, and that through it Canada may be instrumental in averting a real disaster throughout the world, and particularly in Europe, during the coming year.

Fashion News From London

Bell-like skirts supported by stiffened canvas petticoats, off-the-shoulder necklines and even smaller waists are features of summer fashions that are coming into production in Britain's dress industry. Vivacity of design and suppleness of line and detail characterize the prototypes of summer clothes now being shown in London. Pale pink marcella—a fine cotton—brings sophistication to the summer dress in one model; another has been made in a navy and white checked duster cotton model completed by a fitted corselet waist and a full round the shoulders. White sharkskin is being used for tailored dresses highlighted by belts of bright-colored webbing, and white marcella is used for a tailored beach suit with knee-length shorts (gentlemen turn-ups are a feature of these) and a bare aldriff "monkey" jacket with sleeves and corselet front cut in one.

FUNNY And OTHERWISE

"What's the most effective agency for the redistribution of wealth?" "The wives and daughters of rich men."

"Which would you prefer in your future husband—wealth, ability, or appearance?" asked the pretty girl.

"Appearance, my dear," replied the spinster, "but he's got to appear pretty soon."

Tattered Tim: I've been tramping four years, ma'am, and it's all 'cause I heard that the doctors recommended walkin' as the best exercise."

Mrs. Prim: "Well, the doctors are right. Walk along."

Negro Mammy—Ah wants to see Mistah Tompkins.

Office Boy—I'm sorry, but Mr. Tompkins is engaged.

Negro Mammy—Go 'long chile. Ah don't want to marry Mistah Tompkins. Ah jest' wants to see him.

Employer: "Why are you throwing those handbills on the pavement?"

Bill Distributor: "Well, that's what the people does I give 'em to. So it's only saving time."

Doctor (after examining patient)—I don't like the looks of your husband, Mrs. Brown.

Mrs. Brown—Neither do I doctor, but he's good to our children.

"Mary," said her mother reprovingly, "every time you are naughty, I get another grey hair."

"Gee, Mom, you must have been a terror when you were young—just look at Grandma!"

Judge O'Flaherty: "Haven't you been before me before?"

Prisoner: "No, y'r honor. Oi never seen but wan face that looked like yours an' that was a photograph of an Irish lad."

Judge O'Flaherty: "Discharged! Call the next case."

It was a concert in aid of the Children's Fund. A lady whose voice was simply appalling had just finished her song, and Brown almost had a fit when he found his wife was applauding her hoisterously.

"What on earth are you clapping for, have you gone mad?" he cried.

"The woman's voice was simply awful."

"Oh, but her dress is lovely," cried his wife, "and I want to have another look at it so that I can give the dressmaker hints upon making mine."

Two friends (one married, the other a bachelor) were at the latest play, admiring the performance of a famous actor.

"By jove," the married man murmured, "he's grand; he's wonderful. The way he displays affection towards the leading lady, eh?"

"Yes—pretty good," the bachelor agreed. "But you know he's been married to her, actually, for eighteen years."

"What? Really married?" gasped the married man. "Gosh—what an actor!"

B.C. ARCHITECT DESIGNS HOMES TO SAVE STEPS—Mrs. Catherine Chard Wisniewski, wife of a Polish air force veteran and British Columbia's only registered woman architect, is shown here with her six-months-old twins. She graduated from McGill university at 23 with a bachelor of architecture degree. Living at present in a rented home, she hopes to build a home. Her idea of a home is a design for living and working in a home; her advice: do not choose haphazardly from magazines, but benefit from everyday observation.

Uses Drastic Means In Trying To Regain Husband's Love—Mrs. Lucy Wright, 45, was bound over for two years after admitting to magistrates she tampered with a tractor driven by her husband in the hope that "Bert would break his neck." Later she explained to a reporter: "I love Bert." "He means the world to me. Every time I see him he has a wonderful effect on me; but he won't have anything to do with me. A year ago he left me because of a quarrel and we've lived apart ever since then." "I tore some loads from the tractor. I imagined Bert being seriously hurt. That horrified me—but most important of all I imagined myself getting him well again, with him finding love for me once more. That's why I did it."

SNOW GEESSE RETURN AFTER PLANES LEAVE

WINNIPEG.—Blue and lesser snow geese paused on Manitoba lakes and rivers this spring on their flights northward—the first time they have done so since R.C.A.F. gunnery and bombing schools became active four years ago.

After the establishment of the R.C.A.F. schools, particularly at Macdonald, the geese rested in the Dakotas and Iowa and then flew non-stop to Hudson Bay. Last year there was a small flight through Alberta, the first such recorded.

With war-time flying activities ceased, naturalists are hoping the geese will resume their normal route. But B. W. Cartwright, chief naturalist for Ducks Unlimited, is cautious. "The geese are showing extreme restlessness and a divergence from their normal habits. Their whole behavior is in a state of flux and it's difficult to make predictions," he says.

Canadian Home In Eire Haunted

DUBLIN.—The Canadian government owns a "haunted house" in Dublin. That's what the superstitious Irish servants say; and that's why the help must number three.

St. Brigid's, box-like home on the city outskirts, was bought recently as a residence for the high commissioner, Hon. W. F. A. Turgon.

"No Irish servant will stay alone in the place," he said. "Two will stay; but sometimes one has to go outside to do the shopping or other chores. It takes three servants to make sure one is never left alone."

Turgon himself hasn't seen the ghost—not yet, anyway.

GEMS OF THOUGHT

FIDELITY

Fidelity is simple daring to be true in small things as well as great.—Henry Van Dyke.

The talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well, and doing well whatever you do, without a thought of fame.—Longfellow.

Only they who fulfil their duty in everyday matters will fulfil them on great occasions.—Kingsley.

No greater hope have we than in right thinking and right acting, and faith is the blessing of fidelity, courage, patience, and grace.—Mary Baker Eddy.

Constancy to truth and principle may sometimes lead to what the world calls inconsistency in conduct.—Tryon Edwards.

Political or professional reputation cannot last forever, but a conscience void of offence before God and man is an inheritance for eternity.—Daniel Webster.

FORECAST FEATHERS FOR FALL MILLINERY

Feathers replaced flowers as favorite adornments in the millinery mannequin parade held at the Melbourne Town Hall to forecast fashion trends for the Australian autumn and winter seasons.

Australian designers showed it's always possible to start something new in women's hats by featuring models of every color, shape and size. The trend is for off-the-face hats, in striking color combinations, while feathers are most frequently used.

Veiling is still popular, worn over the face to give a mystic air, under the chin, or hanging like a birdcage.

ORIGIN OF SAYING

What is the reason we say a task is "as easy as duck soup"? A pond or puddle of water is, by humorous analogy, called "duck soup." A puddle caused by rainfall will materialize without human effort. Thus "easy as duck soup" indicates a project requiring no special effort.

Most of the streets in Lima, Peru, have different names for every block.

Scientists Have Silent Airplane

LANGLEY FIELD, Va.—Scientists have produced the first "silent" airplane. Two hundred aviation experts, here for a demonstration of the new ship, call it one of aviation's major developments of recent years.

John F. Victory, secretary of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, said that complaints about noise had closed a number of metropolitan airports.

The racket of planes overhead causes some property near airports to decline in value and has brought a number of lawsuits.

J. A. Shortal, project engineer for NACA, said the plane demonstrated here was the first one built in which all silencing methods had been fully applied.

It has a five-bladed propeller which revolves at a slower speed than a conventional one. The new propeller reduces noise pressure 90 per cent.

In the demonstration, a plane equipped with a new propeller and muffler made scarcely more noise than a glider when at a 300-foot altitude, listeners on the ground said.

You can do it, too—and keep your budget smiling. Here's the recipe: take Alabastine, mix with water; brush on over your old walls and ceilings. There's no trick to it. Alabastine dries quickly, without odour, and won't rub off. Comes in ivory, cream, buff, light buff, pink, light blue, grey, light green and white.

HISTORY OF RAYMOND

By ELIZABETH KING

A PIONEER BUILDER AND ARCHITECT

F.B. Rolfsen and family were among the first to come to Raymond. They with George and John Oler, Chas. Tillack and others from American Fork, Utah had received a call from President Lorenzo Snow of the L. D. S. Church to go to Alberta for a period of five years. Consequently of July 24, 1901 the Rolfsens left their home in Utah for Canada.

They came by train, reaching Stirling the latter part of July. They lived in a tent for seven weeks before coming to Raymond to live. Mrs. Rolfsen relates coming to the dedicatory services of the town site. She remembers wading through knee high grass to the centre of the hub where people from Magrath, Raymond and Stirling had gathered for the memorable occasion.

She further relates: "We had very little means when we reached Canada. There were my husband, myself and two children Ray and Basil. One day Apostle Taylor came to the door of our tent and said 'You folks arent very comfortable. Wouldn't you like to go over to Raymond and live?' I immediately replied 'I would like very much to go to Raymond to live'. I don't know why I had that feeling, there were no houses, no friends, no conveniences, still I wanted to be there and help build the town. We immediately began to build a house and about the middle of September we moved in. The house was not lined, there were nowindows we had to put a quilt up for adoor. And the pipe to the stove had to stick out the window opening but we were thankful that we had a roof over our heads, as tent life was cold and miserable.

Neighbors were very thoughtful and kind to each other and when new families arrived in the community neighbors and friends would rally around them rendering what assistance they could. In sickness neighbors would comfort, cheer and nurse the sick ones back to health. I remember Mrs. Munns had a cow and every day she would send a little milk over for my two little children." Thus these pioneers were like one big family in their kindly helpful relations with each other. Pioneering life on the frontier always has been a great struggle to get established but with the struggle comes strength and unity.

The F. B. Rolfsens have the distinction of building the first house in Raymond. The first house in Utah in 1847 is now under a pergola on the Temple block in Salt Lake City. The first house built in Cardston in 1887 stands today as a monument to the courage and enterprise of the pioneers who founded Cardston.

May Raymond's first house built by F. B. Rolfsen in September 1901 stand for many years to come as a reminder of the founding of Raymond and for the spirit of the pioneers who dwelt there.

Mr. Rolfsen was a school teacher in his younger days. He was also an architect and carpenter and after moving to Raymond found all the work he could do. He built and helped build many homes, places of business, schools and churches, among them are the Knight homes, Brimhall's, Thompsons, Henry Fairbanks, Wilcox, Turners, T.O. Kings, Mel drums, Allreds and others. He was also architect of the Second Ward Chapel and Recreational Hall. He designed the Cardston Tabernacle, Raymond Opera House, the Churches at Welling Stirling and Hill Spring, the Central School, Lethbridge, and the Raymond Public School. These buildings will stand for many years as a monument to the building ability and fine workmanship of F. B. Rolfsen.

On August 13th, 1902 he was chosen one of the town councillors. On December 22, 1901 he was chosen 2nd councillor to E. B. Hicks in the Y.M.M.I.A. December 8th, the Rolfsens were received as members of the Raymond Ward. Mrs. Emily Rolfsen and Christina Olson were sustained as the first Relief Society teachers in that organization February 23, 1902 which took place in the home of the first Relief Society President Emma Jane Bevan whose home was then a lean-to, later several rooms were added. This home is now owned by the editor of the Raymond Recorder, S.J. Weaver.

Mrs. Rolfsen raised the first roses ever grown in Raymond. It was not long after this until many beautiful flowers and all kinds of vegetables were grown in and around this part of the country. Mr. and Mrs. Rolfsen were blessed with eight children Ray, Basil, Ethel, Elma, Cleone, Orilla, Verl & Varold. Two of the sons Cleone and Varold offered their services to their country in world War 2. The children are all living in Salt Lake City except Cleone who lives in Pioneer B.C. and Varold who lives in Raymond and operates the Rolfsen farm west of town. Mr. Rolfsen showed his devotion to his church by serving as a missionary to the Southern States and by sacrificing his means to send three sons, Ray, Basil and Cleone to the mission field. He was councillor to Orson A. Wooley in the High Priests Quorum and filled a high position in the High Council of the L.D.S. Church for years.

Mr. Rolfsen spent nearly 40 years of his life as a builder in Raymond. After suffering with a serious malady for two years he passed away September 6th, 1941. Mrs. Rolfsen was a devoted loyal wife throughout his illness and still carries on full of faith and courage and goodness.

Gertie Rolfsen (Hicks) came to Canada with her brother F. B. Rolfsen and lived with them until her marriage to Ephraim B. Hicks. She has watched the growth of Raymond from its very beginning. She was one of those present at the dedication of the town site. She was one of the girls who came over from Stirling to the first dance held in the little village in the upstairs of the McCarthy Hotel. She was a member of the first choir in Raymond. She remembers Raymonds first Dominion Day Celebration. She says: "It was a beautiful day and when the events and sports were nearly over we were startled out wits when a loud clap of thunder was heard, followed by a down pour of rain. Everyone scattered for shelter." Mrs. Hicks remembers going to Cardston in those early days with the baseball players and other young people of the town. While there is said to be hard the streams of water became so swollen the young people were forced to remain in Cardston for three days. As there were no telephones at that time, friends and parents were frantic wondering if the young people had been swallowed up in the swollen torrents. However the rains stopped and the young people returned home in their light vehicles in safety. It was soon discovered that Gertie was a fine cook therefore it was not long before she was chief cook in the McCarthy Hotel. She also cooked for the E.B. Hicks threshing outfit.

Mrs. Hicks has three daughters daughters all of whom reside in Raymond, L.D., Gertie and Ma. E.B. Hicks owned the very first building in Raymond, a lean-to blacksmith shop just west of the present Wm. Meeks home built by F.B. Rolfsen. He was busily engaged in sharpening plow shares for Jesse Knight's outfit at that time. He was councillor to J. Wm. Knight, the first bishop of Raymond. He was also the first president of the Y.M.M.I.A.

Pioneer town and church records reveal Mr. Hicks as being a very active, busy dependable man, serving on many committees. On April 20 1901 the Town Council authorized Mr. Hicks as a committee to secure a forty acre plot on Temple Hill for a cemetery. He authorized R.E. Gordon, with the help of three men to survey the cemetery plot. When one enterprise was finished he was alert and anxious to start another. Thus he accomplished much in the short time he was permitted to remain on this earth. He passed away in December 1919.

Incidents connected with our pioneer residents show that they were resourceful and self reliant and will awaken renewed admiration for them.

Whaling Harvest Exceeds Expectations

Britain is bringing home from the Antarctic a rich harvest of whale oil, meat, meal for cattle, feed and meat extract. The season has been remarkably good and the factory ship "Balaena" was fortunate in securing the highest proportion of whales and edible oil. Owing to the fact that at the present moment world needs are the most critical ever known, no less than 14 different expeditions have been fishing in Antarctic waters. More than 2,000 whales were caught by United Kingdom crews, 185,000 barrels of oil were produced in addition to sperm oil and other by-products. Another way in which the expedition distinguished itself was in the pioneer use of aircraft for whale-spotting and for weather reconnaissance.

HUMAN HAIR USED TO REPAIR VEIL

HARRISMITH, South Africa.—An heirloom veil repaired with human hair, was used by a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Pattinson when she was married recently. The veil had been used by several of her ancestors. It had, however, developed a few small holes, and "invisible mender" could do nothing with the veil. The threads were so fine that they had nothing to match it. Mrs. Pattinson eventually removed several long hairs from her head, and repaired the veil so beautifully that not a mark is visible.

Blames Sun Spots For Inclement Weather

LONDON, Ont. — An astronomer looked at the sun, shook his head dubiously and said it didn't look like much of a summer.

Dr. W. C. Colgrove, University of Western Ontario astronomer, explained there were too many sun spots in sight—250 to 300 of them.

The spots cause inclement weather by increasing the heat of the sun and absorbing the earth's water bodies, causing precipitation, he said. Just what parts of the world suffer the most will depend on how the spots are grouped.

LONDON. — Planning to cycle across Canada, Michael Bradley, a professional singer, and Alfred Griffiths, a store manager, both of London, left here for Montreal by plane.

The two men will receive £75 ($300) each, two cycles, two changes of clothing—and abundant hopes.

On the cycling tour they will seek jobs to pay their way. "We plan to reach Vancouver in September so that we can cross the Rockies before the snow starts," Griffiths said. "We do not want to spend our £150. We hope to pick up odd jobs to pay our expenses."

"In Vancouver we shall decide what part of Canada we like best and return there to settle. There is no incentive working in England so we decided, while we are still young enough, to find something nearer our own ideas of living."

Griffiths is 33 and Bradley 38.

MY WEEK

by R. J. Deachman

I take this item from the Sackville Tribune-Post.

"The rules and regulation which follow were for the employees in a Chicago department store in the 1880's. I wonder what would happen if we had to work under the same conditions in this day and age?

"Store must be open from 6 a.m. to 9 p.m. the year round.
"Store must be swept, counters, shelves and showcases dusted, lamps trimmed, filled and chimneys cleaned, pens made, doors and windows opened, a pail of coal and a bucket of water brought in before breakfast.
"Store must not be opened on the Sabbath unless necessary and then only for a few minutes.

"The employee in the habit of smoking Spanish cigars, being shaved at the barber, going to dances and other places of amusement will assuredly give his employers reason to be suspicious of his integrity and honesty.

"Men employees are given one evening a week for courting and two if they go to a prayermeeting.
"After fourteen hours in the store, the leisure hours should be spent for the most part in reading.
Is it true? Well I have never known the gentleman who writes this column in the S.T.P. to write anything that wasn't true. I accept it. I can't verify it from actual experience. I was too young at that time, I wasn't then working in a department store.

Now look at the date of this item. Human slavery had ended in the United States in 1863, only seventeen years earlier. The average worker in Canada at that time was earning two hundred dollars a year. Freedom of the individual has been one of the by-products of industrial expansion. So long as man worked with his hands and produced only what he could by that means, he was more or less a slave for the simple reason that he couldn't produce enough to give him real freedom. But when the worker works with multiplied power, when he had great machines working for him, then his capacity to produce increased and as it increased his freedom expanded. He was no longer bound by silly rules which the boss might impose upon him.

And that brings us to this point. It is to the supreme interest of every worker that we should increase available power, that we should have better machines, better equipment, for as we do this the position of the worker will be improved, vastly improved. He will have greater freedom even than he has today, and more ways of using his freedom. The Russian peasant is a good worker but he is poor because he lacks the machines, that, also is the reason why he lacks freedom.

FREE BLOOD FOR ALBERTA

Alberta citizens between the ages of 18 and 65, will be asked to register as voluntary blood donors when the Alberta division, Canadian Red Cross Society inaugurates Donor Enrollment Week June 15th to 21st. The Red Cross Donor Week Enrollment committee in Raymond, under the chairmanship of Lee Brewster will be responsible for the registration of voluntary donors in this district. Gone will be the dieting days, when a prospective donor had to choose between a full meal and giving donation of blood. Under the new system which has been developed by Dr. W. Stuart Stanbury, National Director of the Red Cross free blood Transfusion service, the giving of blood is a simple, half-hour job with no pre-diet and no discomforts. But the results cannot be measured in terms of time or personal convenience, for your blood may save the life of a neighbor.

Residents of Raymond will be asked to register as voluntary donors during the week set aside for this purpose—June 15th to 21st. The actual giving of blood will be undertaken at a time to be announced later when the mobile Blood Transfusion Unit will visit this district. At that time the Local Red Cross Branch will provide quarters and certain staff with the mobile unit providing all equipment and medical, nursing, and technical staff.

This new humanitarian service, which is already servicing the hospitals of British Columbia, will provide blood plasma, free of any charge whatsoever, to all hospital patients where the local institution has agreed to provide the transfusion free. In this connection the Association of Alberta hospitals have made it known that eventually all active treatment hospitals in Alberta will be included in the plan.

Through this extension of one of the Greatest Red Cross war-time services, Alberta citizens, and eventually everyone in Canada, needing transfusion treatment will share in one of the greatest miracles—the gift of life from a fellow citizen.

To keep this Service operating in Alberta, the Alberta Division of the Canadian Red Cross Society will be opening a depot or laboratory in Edmonton and a sub-depot in Calgary. These centres, staffed by fully qualified medical, nursing, and technical staff, will handle all the blood donated in this province down to the servicing of blood and plasma to the hospitals.

Your gift of blood, not more than two or three times a year, may mean the difference between life and death to a loved one or a friend.

REMEMBER Donor Enrollment Week, June 15th to 21st, and register with your Red Cross at that time.

Registration will be carried out in Raymond at the S. B. Card and Sons Coal Office, Mr. Card having been kind enough to offer space in his office for this to be done.

OUR COMPLETE SHORT STORY—

DARK CLOUD DRIFTING

By ROBERT H. SCANTON

SUDDENLY the typing started again. Kay's hands gripped the porch rail. Once she had loved to hear Hal typing. It had always sounded sure and smooth—like Hal himself, but now there was something fierce and desperate about it. Out there in the dark pergola Hal was tearing himself to pieces, trying to claw through blindness.

"It's like a black cloud between me and the typewriter, Kay," he'd said. "I'm bursting with stuff to write but the minute my fingers touch the keys I go blind clean through."

The typing stopped and she heard him curse as he crushed the paper in his hands. Then he put in another sheet and the mad, plunging rhythm resumed.

"If he'd only turn on the light," she whispered, "at least for my sake." That's what she hated most—Hal out there working in the dark, fighting the dark, being tortured by it.

Again the typing stopped, but this time Kay didn't hear the whirr of the roller and the angry crunch of paper. Hal was probably sitting there slumped over the typewriter. In the old days that meant he was fighting with an idea, but now it meant that an idea was beating and pounding him. Hal was proud, too proud for his own good. She had watched the laugh go out of him, the jaw set tighter and tighter, and when she'd plead with him to come to bed he'd shake his head slowly.

"I can't sleep. I've got to write one good thing that isn't awkward and clumsy—like a blind man groping through a lighted room."

Kay leaned on the railing, listening intently, but no sound came from the pergola. She turned and slipped quietly down the steps and across the yard.

In the thicker gloom of the pergola she caught the faint glint of metal and Hal's form slumped over the typewriter.

"Hal," she called softly. Then she opened the door and snapped on the light. She bent over her husband and shook him gently, "Hal, are you asleep?"

"No," he growled, "Leave me alone."

Hal's voice frightened her. "What were you writing tonight, honey?" she asked and sat down beside him.

"Now is the time for all good blind men to rollick around the maypole," he finally answered in the same bitter tone. Kay reached across his arm and pulled the sheet out of the typewriter.

"Don't read it, Kay. It's just me raving. He reached for the paper but she pushed his hand away."

"Well," he demanded when she had read it. He had always waited with pride for her to comment. Now he was on the defensive, ashamed of what he had written. She laid her hand gently over his, "Hal, why did you write this?" He shrugged wearily.

"It's just ranting." "But Hal," she protested. She handed him a cigarette, "Sit down, Hal. I want to read this to you, then let's hear you talk about black clouds."

"Kay, what's the use?"

"Sit down, please. Now listen. 'Is heaven a world of color, Lord? A land of a splash beauty, mottled and thrown by the four winds to lay and burn where it will? Is Heaven, Lord, gently winding streets, tall shedding trees? Is it farm boys standing by their horses with the world in their eyes? Is it the flick of a mare's tail, or the sun shining dark brown on the mahogany coat of a pony? Is it the dog standing on the sidewalk watching the world pass by? Is it a place of small houses nestled down in the dead leaves of autumn? Does it have the sheen of the sun on the water? Is it blue with a cerulean cast of the sky on a harbor. Is it, Lord?"

When she finished neither of them spoke. Hal seemed to be staring off into the darkness, the half-smoked cigarette smoldering between his fingers. Then he got up and began to pace the small brick floor. Kay's heart skipped a beat as he faced her trying to hide a sheepish grin, "Hou, did I write that?"

"You did."

"Huh," he said again in disbelief. "Me, old Hal the muck raker, writing something like that." Suddenly the grin vanished and Hal shook his head. "Yeah, but what good's ranting."

"Ranting?" Kay gripped him by the shoulders and tried to shake him. "Don't you see what's happened?"

"No, I don't." "Hal, that's got the makings of a dozen stories."

When he spoke his voice was choked and the muscles around his jaw were trembling. "Aw, Kay." He slipped his arm around her and crashed her to him. She reached up and switched off the light. They stood there in the darkness, clinging to each other. She felt his body shivering against her. His tears fell on her face. She pulled his head down onto her shoulder and held him tenderly. "I'm sorry, Kay, I'm sorry," he kept saying over and over.

"It's all right, Hal. You had this stew coming. You shouldn't have tried to keep it to yourself." At last he pulled free and straightened up. "Feel better?" she asked gently.

"Like a dish rag. Gee, first I pray on the typewriter and now I bawl like an old lady." "Maybe those are the things you needed most," she said softly. "Hal, you've changed but you won't admit it." She stopped, hating the darkness which hid his face. "You're no muck-raking reporter any more, darling. Your blindness has made you remember all the beautiful things you've seen. Those are the things that you've got to write about now."

"I can't do it."

"You can," she snapped back. "What's the matter with you, Hal? Just because you can't beat something down with your hands, because you have to dig into yourself, and maybe even do a little praying, you think you're through." Kay tried to check herself but her words came flooding out. "You're fighting a tougher fight now, Hal, what if round one did go against you, you can't waste your time feeling sorry for yourself. She stopped, fumbling for words.

"But, Kay, I've never written anything but knock-down-drag-out newspaper stuff." "You did, tonight."

"Yeah, tonight," he said.

"And you can do it again," she insisted. Now she felt like weeping. She groped for the screen door and ran out of the pergola. Hal called after her, but she stumbled up the porch steps and into the kitchen. She sat down and hid her head on the table, waiting for the tears to come, but she was too exhausted to cry.

Then she heard the sound—the even, smooth clicking of the typewriter. Hal was typing again, only this time there was something different in the sound. It was more like the old, sure touch. Kay got up and ran to the porch. A small patch of white light lay on the lawn next to the pergola. Hal was writing, and he had remembered to switch on the light—for her. She leaned against the porch railing and stared at the patch of light. Now she could cry.

Less Newsprint Seen For Canadian Papers

OTTAWA.—Canada has agreed to increase newsprint shipments to Argentina in return for greater supplies of vegetable oils from that country, it was learned here recently from an authoritative government source. The "horse trade" between the two countries will mean a slight reduction in quotas of newsprint allocated users in Canada and the United States.

This Motor Coach Really Luxurious

The small plane industry may be faced with competition from bus builders, suggests the Wall Street Journal. An attempt is being made to persuade the corporation executive to forsake the company-owned plane for a luxurious motor coach. One of the first recruits to hit the open road in a home-away-from-home on wheels is Hugh Drane, president of Hugh Drane Ice Factories, Inc., Corsicana, Texas. He will take delivery on a gleaming white, 35-foot, five berth coach. Mr. Drane will use it to travel the 1,000 miles over which his plants are spread. He formerly flew. Costing between $45,000 and $50,000, the coach is air-conditioned. It has an intercommunication system in addition to radio telephone. The coach contains two staterooms, each with two full-sized berths. The master stateroom has a shower, toilet and washbowl. The guest stateroom gets along with a toilet and bowl. Between the two staterooms is a good-sized galley with an ice-box, four-burner stove, and sink. There's plenty of closet space as well as a capacious rear luggage compartment.

In the restaurant of the "Enterprise Scotland, 1947" Exhibition, which will be held at the Royal Scottish Museum in Edinburgh this August, visitors will see a novel chandelier. The skeleton of a whale hangs from the ceiling of the big hall which is being turned into a restaurant, and the task of dismantling it would have been considerable. The architects have therefore decided to make use of the whale and wire it for lighting.

Gift Symbolizes Ties Between Norway, Iceland

NEW YORK.—A Norwegian delegation composed of Government, Church, scientific and industrial representatives will leave for Iceland late in July where Norway's Crown Prince Olav will unveil a statue of Snorre Sturlasson, the ancient Icelandic historian. A gift from the Norwegian to the Icelandic people, the movement is the work of Norway's great sculptor, the late Gustav Vigeland, and will symbolize the close ties between the two northern neighbors.

Snorre Sturlasson died 700 years ago, shortly after he had written his masterpiece "The Sagas of the Norwegian Kings". He was a descendant of the Norwegian colonizers who settled in Iceland between the years 874 and 930, and whose story is preserved in the "Record of the Colonizers"—a literary epic which has survived the ages.

According to plan, the Norwegian delegation will make the trip aboard a flotilla of Norwegian destroyers, and a sizeable excursion of Norwegian tourists to Iceland is planned to coincide with the event.

Russian Engineer Invents Television Phone

LONDON.—A telephone fitted with a screen which enables the caller to see the person talking at the other end has been constructed by I. P. Zakharov, a Leningrad engineer, Moscow Radio said.

A Moscow Radio reporter who visited the inventor in his laboratory and talked over the telephone said he could easily distinguish on the screen not only the face of the inventor, but also the title and date of the newspaper which the inventor held in his hand.

The instrument still is in an experimental stage, but the inventor claimed it soon will be produced on a mass scale and introduced into the Soviet telephone system.

The new invention is known as the "video telephone".
